AIACC Regional Associate Director

Candidate Applicant Philosophy Summary

The adage, “You get what you put in” has always been popular and common through my experience in the AIA. It is also an efficient tactic towards successful development and desired results. I first came across the AIA as a student and decided to spend time outside of studio for my professional development and become a steward of the profession and our community. After years of involvement, I have seen the fruits of the then unknown efforts I was practicing as a student.

I believe the AIA is a powerful tool and an important path towards the successful, well-rounded Architect, Leader, and Citizen. AIA has been imperative in my development. Through this involvement, one will receive more than what is put in.

As Regional Associate Director, my goals and objectives are not only to support, but to educate, inspire, and engage Associates into their professions and local AIA Chapters. The voice of young professionals are critical as the generational shift continue to grow in our place of business. It is important to edify and engage these voices through communication, activities, and giving them right tools for success.

Thank you,

Candidate Applicant,

David Garcia
